CEDAR BLUFF'S REPLY TO BLUE SULPHUR

(Communicated.)

In the issue of Pocahontas Headlight, of date the 2nd of August, it is contended that the postoffice at present known as "Blue Sulphur," should hereafter be called "Cedar Bluff." These two post-offices are within 1 mile of each other in the town of Cedar Bluff, the former at the railroad station (near the Scotts) and the latter in the more thickly settled part of the town.

Why was the Cedar Bluff postoffice removed from the residence of T. M. Scott, at old Cedar Bluff, to its present location? Because Mr. Scott could not take what was known as the "Iron Clad Oath" which at the close of the Civil War was required by the Federal Government in order to hold a Federal office, and Miss Ruthy Prather, whose father then resided where T. A. Gillespie now lives, consented to take charge of the office for the convenience of the people, with the understanding that it be moved to her father's residence which was done, and she took the required oath and became postmistress, which office she held for a number of years, and it was still Cedar Bluff post-office and has remained so, notwithstanding its location on the banks of Indian Creek, to the present time.

She was succeeded by Dr. James Peery, deceased; he by Alex. Beavers and Beavers by C. H. Peery and he by the present postmaster, W. P. Cecil.

It seemed then, as it does now, to have been but natural and appropriate that the office be moved into the town of Cedar Bluff in order to accommodate the patrons of the office, who after the close of the war were rapidly building up and peopling the town, and as a natural consequence it became necessary that the office be located in or near the center of the town.

At the time of the removal of the Cedar Bluff postoffice, immediately after the close of the Civil War, and until but recently, we have never heard an objection offered as to its location. August 7th, 1907.
